PEPPER ANN

Too COOL
To BE TWELVE.

The Perfect Preteen Role Model for Building Character!

"Don't Steal"

"Be Honest"

"Celebrate diversity"

"Avoid stereotypes"

"Treat others with respect"

It's more important than ever to raise issues like these with youngsters in grades 3-8. But if you're faced with pre-teens who think they're too cool for school, enlist the help of a quirky animated adolescent who's "been there, done that." Students will relate to Pepper Ann as she comes face to face with her own shortcomings and learns to do the right thing.

In these two episodes of Disney's hit TV show, Pepper Ann learns to be honest and avoid cultural stereotypes. But not before she brings her unique adolescent sensibility to each new challenge.

Now you can screen a Classroom Edition video of these Pepper Ann shows:

Dances with Ignorance

When Pepper Ann decides to "go Indian" in a big way, she forgets to get the facts — and turns into a walking, talking cultural stereotype. Students will see just how offensive an uninformed, two-dimensional view of an entire racial or ethnic group can be.

The Tell-Tale Fuzzy

Pepper Ann finds a wad of money at the mall and succumbs to temptation. She spends it on something she's been wanting for a long time: a painting of her comic-book hero, Fuzzy. Too bad her guilty conscience — and Fuzzy himself — won't let PA enjoy her new treasure.
