

The Cold War

MAPS

A 102-mile long barrier completely encircled the western half of Berlin, cutting it off from East Berlin and the rest of East Germany.

Europe, after World War II, was a continent clearly divided.